Current position: Associate Professor at the Department of Special Public Law and Business Law at the University of Santiago de Compostela. Area: Civil and Criminal Procedural Law.

2003: PhD in Law from the Universidad Carlos III de Madrid (Spain) and the Università degli Studi di Pisa (Italy) with the doctoral thesis: The Supreme Court and the protection of fundamental rights. The appeal in cassation and the art. 53.2 of the Spanish Constitution.

Since 2014 I have been a member of various national research projects on the transmission of personal data in judicial and criminal cooperation in the European Union. My investigation projects focus on the Passenger Name Record (PNR) data and the way in which police and judicial cooperation is articulated in the European Union for the use of PNR data in the fight against terrorism and other serious crimes.

I am currently a member of a national research project analysing the consequences of artificial intelligence for criminal proceedings.
